1. a. Neue Kaserne:

Troops observed on 2 March 1950 wore red-bordered black epaulets with artillery insignia. About 150 men were seen in close-order drill in the barracks yard. Two groups of 8 to 10 men practiced with wire reels and field telephones of German origin. Another group of soldiers held aiming circle practice.

d. The Soviet residential quarters in Corkistrasse were no longer occupied. About 10 families of officers stationed in the Neue Kaserne were still living in the former civil servants' houses attached to the Neue Kaserne. Four or five other families living there belonged to personnel of the kommandatura or of the MVD. Seven or eight Soviet families were still billeted in the August Bebel Kaserne.

3. a. Alte Kaserne:

Gate guards wore red-bordered black epaulets with tank insignia on 23 March 1950. Local residents said that 18 armored vehicles left toward Altengrabow on 15 March 1950.

A JS tank, four trucks, including [REDACTED] and one passenger car were entrained at the freight station. The vehicles left on a freight train toward Magdeburg at about 8 p.m. Fifty-five flatcars had been assembled at the Burg railroad station. Railroad employees stated that, by order of Soviet transportation authorities, these flatcars could be used for German purposes for only periods of a few days and had to be returned to Burg (4).

Comment:

- (3) The statements by local residents that tanks left Burg toward Altengrabow on 15 March 1950 and that troops from Burg were staying in Altengrabow are given credence. The troops possibly left for the nearby training grounds to hold temporary advanced combat practice firing.
- (4) The observation of empty rolling stock side-tracked at the Burg railroad station indicates that, at the end of March 1950, the troops had not yet been transferred to troop training grounds for summer maneuvers.
- (5) The vacating of the residential area on Corki-strasse by Soviet officer families again proves the repatriation to the Soviet Union of a large percentage of Soviet dependents.
